The position is for a three-year term, beginning officially with the Spring 2011 issue. It is expected, however, that the current co-editors will assist in the transition of the editorship beginning June 1, 2010.

Interested candidates may apply individually or as a team. Submit a letter of application that includes the following details:

- General qualifications in the field of children's literature
- Prior experiences with the Children's Literature Assembly and/or the National Council of Teachers of English
- Previous experiences writing, editing, and/or publishing in the field
- Vision for future directions for the Journal of Children's Literature including possible themes and specific ideas for regular features
- A plan of work for achieving your vision for the journal
- Available resources to support the editorship, including institutional support
- Technological expertise

The editor or editors must be members of the Children's Literature Assembly and the National Council of Teachers of English.

Send a letter of application and vitae to:

Dr. Evelyn B. Freeman
